I am a jinx. I admit it. Sometime during the week prior to the September 5 launch, I posted that the weather forecast for that day looked like it would be great for flying. Then, two days before the launch, when Larry Gerlach dropped the two batteries off at my house, he asked if I also wanted the RRP [Rocket Retrieval Pole] I said something to the effect of "nah, there isn't supposed to be a hint of wind, we'll never come close to a tree." So, of course on Sunday there was a nice 15-20mph breeze blowing, and the first rocket off the pad was my 4-year old son Timmy's Estes Sky Dart, which found its way into a tree. I will NOT, however, take the blame for Dale Greene's shred of a rocket glider. He did that all on his own.

We did get to meet a new member, Mike Hershey and his family. They only got to fly two models – an Alpha III and a vintage Honest John, but they looked like that had fun!

All but three of Rick Hackman's flights took place after I left, and his dad dropped the information off later. Looks like Rick has a stash of Apogee 1/4A motors [don't we all?].
